GENERAL REMARKS

Another school year about completed, and as we settle our financial affairs, look over our statistical report, and consider the work accomplished during the spring and fall terms, we have every reason to be pleased. Even though our teachers have been young, with little experience in teaching, they have worked faithfully.

Our winter term was a disappointment. Scholars were kept at home day after day, because of illness and other reasons, until it seemed only right and best to close the schools in the North and South divisions at the end of six weeks and to continue the other schools two weeks, making twenty-nine weeks of school.

New readers were provided in the spring and the old ones exchanged; the old books being so badly soiled and worn we realized almost nothing for them,—$1.98 for the whole number sent away. We would urge better care of the books, and that a record be kept of books loaned, as many forget to return them. Every year new geographies and arithmetics are called for; no one knows where the old books are, consequently the town must purchase new ones.

The repair money we have endeavored to use as judiciously as the buildings would allow.

The transportation of scholars created the usual disturbance. The matter of one or two schools in town is again discussed, also the expert supervision of schools, and while we are not able to decide these matters we should at least give them consideration.

If parents would be more loyal to their own division and the teacher employed there, keeping their children in school, the latter would receive greater benefit and thus lay a foundation for future prosperity.

As we employ our teachers we believe that the equalization of school privileges should be our ideal, and the scholarship and qualification of the teachers should be carefully considered.

“The highest purpose in education is character building, the making of men and women who shall be citizens worthy in every way to help direct the destinies of the nation." This truth places obligations upon the teachers and school authorities alike and should receive constantly increasing attention.

Thanking the citizen for their interest and co-operation, we conclude our report.
